TEACHING COMPETENCE

My teaching in manuscript studies covers codicology, the material and intellectual aspects of book production, textual criticism, ancient and medieval Latin palaeography, script history, book history, and digital manuscript studies. My research in philosophical and cosmological questions translate into teaching seminars based on the close reading of texts within ancient and medieval philosophy, cosmology, and science. Using my background in classics and literary studies, my further teaching competence relates to teaching seminars on literary texts, currently within the genre of autobiography. My broad teaching competence includes Latin text reading, Latin language, ancient and medieval intellectual history, and medieval history.

RESEARCH

My current research focuses on the cognitive aspects of the medieval manuscript page layout, visual thinking, use of diagrams and transmission of concepts in manuscripts of philosophical and scientific texts, late ancient and medieval reading, writing, and interpreting practices, textual transmission and genesis of marginalia; Plato's Timaeus, Calcidius' Commentary and the cosmological concepts of infinity.
